In the chronology of Heavyweight's work, the Cigars font is one of the first attempts at a serif font, undertaken in spite of fear of its difficulty; however, the challenge was also seen as an important step in the development of the type foundry. The name refers to admiration of old advertising materials of the Marlboro tobacco brand that used the very popular Century typeface from American Type Founders on its posters. Most of Heavyweight's fonts are created for a specific purpose, with a clear vision of its use in a specific project and its graphic works based on the particular alphabets. It was the same for Cigars, which was created on the occasion of the international conference "Artistic Research: Is There Some Method?" at the Institute of Philosophy of the Czech Academy of Sciences. Custom-designed fonts are expected to respond to contemporary technological as well as cultural tendencies. Several years after the conference, work was recommenced on an altered version of the Cigars typeface, version 2.0, with an ambition to create an extensive typeface with italics. Its development was attended by the usual indecision and great respect for this font category, supported by the dilemma as to the degree to which the original spirit of a custom-designed typeface should be retained and what should be replaced to make the font more versatile. This was naturally combined with the author's personality and style, which we like to reflect in a font. In response to this question, we made the fundamental decision to elaborate an extensive range of styles of the typeface, which inevitably altered the nature of the typeface. The original properties of the typeface were so distinct that they could no longer be applied in thicker weights. A fundamental advantage and property of the current version as compared to the original is legibility and harmony, which naturally changes depending on the choice of thickness that alters the character of a font. A pronounced feature of the font style is its calligraphic nature, which is only manifest in details, not in design. A reference to calligraphic tools is evident particularly in letters "c", "f", "r" and others, where the letter does not end with a classic terminal, but rather, a perpendicular cut.

We're here to quell that sensation and get you on the right track, cigar in hand. If anything, the cigar is a more respected figure than ever these days. We're inundated with all kinds of things to inhale, from e-cigarettes to CBG joints. Meanwhile, the cigar has simply carried on, relying on distinctive tobacco and blends thereof to offer a real, tangible smoking experience without any related high. Really, it's about the flavor and, while we acknowledge the health concerns, the look. There's something sexy about a person in custody of a cigar, especially if they know what they're doing. Before you start, we highly recommend you check out our comprehensive guide to cigar types. It'll give you the lowdown on types of cigars you're likely to encounter, as well as a better idea of what type you might enjoy. On an even more basic level, you can learn more about the
